Wheels to spare

Want to borrow a bike?
Next year, Chicago will have 3,000 to pick from

Chicago Tribune

Chicago officials on Wednesday announced that the wheels are rolling on a new transit option.

The city and a company to be chosen will launch a bicycle-sharing rental program next summer, working toward a goal of providing 3,000 bikes for short-term use between 300 pick-up and drop-off stations, officials said. The program will be expanded in 2013 and 2014 to include an additional 2,000 bicycles and 200 more docking stations.

It would operate similarly to car-sharing programs, such as the one managed by I-Go, officials said.

An annual bike-sharing membership would run about $75, and participants would be issued key fobs to check out bikes, Chicago Transportation Commissioner Gabe Klein said. Members would pay no additional costs to use the bikes for the first 30 minutes, which is the period anticipated on most trips.

Fees would be charged for additional time and for visitors to the city and other one-time users. Daily, weekly and annual memberships also would be offered, officials said, adding that users would pay with credit cards.

Although Mayor Emanuel promised during his campaign to start a bike-sharing network in his first year, the concept was brought home by former Mayor Richard M. Daley, who borrowed the idea after visiting Paris in 2007 and test-riding a "Velib" bike there. Worldwide, there are more than 200 bike-sharing programs, according to bicycling industry experts.

Wait, don't we have this?

The bike program announced Wednesday is being billed as the city's "first large-scale bike-sharing program." A small existing program, called "Chicago B-cycle," began last year with about a half-dozen bike rental stations along the lakefront and downtown. Chicago B-cycle (chicago.bcycle.com) offers memberships and temporary passes. It mostly attracts tourists and is modeled after bike-sharing programs in Paris and Denver.

The Paris program initially experienced numerous problems, including a high rate of bike thefts. Officials there solved the problem by installing GPS tracking systems and other safeguards. Klein said the Chicago program will contain similar measures.

Klein said bike sharing is ideal for filling gaps in the public transit system or completing the last part of a trip, such as between a transit station and a workplace.

"We're really envisioning this not just as a bike program," Klein said. "This is an entirely new transit option. It's a way to link people for their last mile from the CTA stop. It's a way for people to get to the grocery store, or to get to their husband's work or their girlfriend's house. This is also a way for tourists to come and see the city at street level."

THE BASICS

» Under the plan, users would pick up a bike from a self-service docking station and drop off the bike at the station closest to their destination.

» The stations, which will be powered by solar energy, will be placed about one-quarter mile apart in densely populated areas, including near CTA and Metra stations.

» Members will sign up for bike sharing on a website, while one-time users would use a credit card at an automated kiosk at the docking station.

» The fees and station locations will be set after the city hires a vendor. The city on Wednesday issued a request for proposals seeking a company to operate the program. Responses are expected by Oct. 25, officials said.

Police bulletin: Wear some pants

Anthony Roberts
» redeye@tribune.com

There's always a defining moment that makes you want to become a police officer. For me, it was seeing an injustice that was just so heinous that I could no longer sit back and watch.

Riding the Blue Line on a chilly day last week, I saw a woman who I wouldn't have minded getting to know a little better—until she stood up, revealing that she was wearing denim cut-offs. I'm no expert, but I don't think chill-induced goosebumps make for a good fashion accessory.

In case you didn't notice the date, steady rain or drop in temperature, summer has said its final goodbyes, and gone with it should be that summer wardrobe. Even Mother Nature agrees with me—Friday is the first official day of fall.

Though I'm not an officer of the law, seeing some of the recent offenses has made me want to join the fashion police. So instead of handing out citations—which I'm technically not authorized to do—I've busied myself handing out advice.

I'll start with the ladies. It pains me to say this, but it's time to pack away the Daisy Dukes and dig out the dungarees. Pneumonia is not an endearing quality in a woman. And I'm all for a low-cut shirt now and then, but refusing to put your top parts in a sweater is just not sexy. Anyone who wants to see frozen breasts can always go to the grocery store. And there—unlike on the CTA—it's OK to stare.

Not that the fellas are any better. Now I'm no hater, but can the gym rat guys please put a shirt on? You're proud of the body you've built—we get that. But does hypothermia accent your muscle tone? No. Wearing a biceps-baring shirt is fine in July, but this is September, and doing the sleeveless thing this far into the year will more likely result in a treatment with Vicks VapoRub than being treated to a rubdown from Vicky. (Also, guys, those awful man-capris are not acceptable this time of year—or any time of the year, if we're really being honest.)

I know it can be hard to swallow, but summer's not coming back, no matter how much skin you bare. Trying to squeeze a few more miles out of those summer dresses and shorts isn't doing anyone a favor. From a practical standpoint, remember: We do in fact live in Chicago, and we all know the weather can turn unforgiving and frigid in all of five minutes.

Nobody gets excited about putting on hoodies and thick pants, but shivering is an even worse look. Remember, layers are your friend. Take it from me, your friendly local fashion policeman.

the next frontier?

On heels of latest tweaks, Facebook to announce another shakeup

CNN

SAN FRANCISCO If you thought Wednesday's Facebook news was a jolt, get ready for Thursday.

As the social media powerhouse edges toward the billion-users mark, an entire ecosystem that has grown up in its wake—including developers, partners, advertisers and rivals—is waiting to hear what's next. They'll get answers Thursday at Facebook's annual developer conference.

Anchored by a keynote from Facebook CEO Mark Zuckerberg, the conference traditionally serves as the launching point for new features that map out the strategy of the social network, which now has more than 750 million active users.

This year, it begins with music. Sources with knowledge of Facebook's plans say the site is partnering up with services such as Spotify, Mog, Rhapsody and Rdio to allow users to share music from different services on the site. Spotify CEO Daniel Ek is slated to speak at a session on "the future of digital music."

"What Facebook is going to do is, you'll be able to subscribe to whatever you like and we'll be able to have a joint music experience," said Eliot Van Buskirk, editor of music/tech blog evolver.fm.

But sources close to Facebook say the company's vision extends beyond just the music space. The social giant is readying a broader media platform, with a slogan of "Read, Watch, Listen." The company's ubiquitous "Like" button could be getting some company: Facebook is rumored to be set to roll out new buttons to accompany its new media campaign.

Facebook is rumored to be working with services such as Spotify to give users the ability to share music. Spotify CEO Daniel Ek (right, with co-founder Martin Lorentzon) is scheduled to speak on "the future of digital music" during Facebook's annual developer conference.

But Facebook wasn't making members wait until Thursday to start sampling its latest creations. The company launched a steady stream of tweaks and new features over the past week.

On Tuesday, Facebook unveiled changes to its News Feed. When users log in, they see a stream of customized photos and status messages that is intended to highlight updates from the people the user interacts with the most.

"You really shouldn't miss important updates from your friends," News Feed product manager Keith Schacht said in an interview. A new running ticker on the top right of the Facebook page will offer real-time updates as they're posted.

Facebook also recently beefed up its "lists" feature, making it easier to share messages with a small subset of people on your friends list, and launched a "subscribe" button, which lets you customize the content that shows up in your News Feed.

Stay tuned for more. "We're entering launch season," Facebook vice president of engineering Mike Schroepfer said at the TechCrunch Disrupt conference last week. The line echoed a statement Zuckerberg made in July, at a news event he called the kickoff to Facebook's 2011 "launching season."

"We've been really building up steam ... in making improvements we've been wanting to make for a long time," Mike Schroepfer told the Disrupt audience.

But some of those new features seem a bit—well, familiar. Subscriptions essentially brings Twitter-like updates to Facebook, while the curation tool Facebook calls "smart lists" isn't too far removed from Circles on Google+ (which opened to the public this week).

"I think competition is great," Schroepfer said. "It keeps people sharp."

BREAKING NEWS

WTF is up with these changes?!

Tribune newspapers

Maybe it's time for Facebook to finally roll out that "dislike" button. The world's most popular social networking site is getting an earful about changes it made to its News Feed feature right before its annual developers conference Thursday.

Of course, any time Facebook makes changes, users revolt at audible levels. With more than 750 million users, even a small protest can stir up the Web.

The loudest protest came in 2006 with the launch of News Feed, which turned into one of the site's most popular features. Now users are taking to their News Feeds to protest the overhaul of the News Feed.

And they are complaining in comments to the official Facebook blog post announcing the changes that were supposed to help users by spotlighting the most important information about their friends instead of just the most recent.

The main complaint: An algorithm that spits out your "Top Stories" by crunching factors such as which friends you interact with most and which of your friends' posts get the most comments or "likes" isn't working.

If this brouhaha follows the usual course, users will complain, threaten to leave and then learn to love—or at least live with—the changes.

The catch? Before, there really wasn't anywhere else for people to go. But now there's a new social networking service in town: Google+ which opened to the public Tuesday.

There's something familiar about this ...

Have you ever had a pushy date who tried to order your entree without a clue about your favorite foods?

Or how about an obnoxious hairstylist who purposely gave you a faux hawk even though you clearly asked for a crew cut?

Well, Facebook is making those pushy peeps look like milque-toasts by comparison.

While we were sleeping, the social media giant made some tweaks to its design, including the controversial new “top story” function, which sweeps aside the once chronologically determined “most recent” feed and instead presents you with a single “top stories” feed based on what Facebook software deems are the most important tidbits from your friends.

You heard us right. Facebook thinks it can tell who and what you find most interesting.

Um. Yeah. And it's a bit creepy, according to some furious feedback Wednesday on the Interwebs.

It reminds us of other head-scratchingly silly—to stalkerish—things Facebook has launched in the past.

Mmmm ... Beacon

In 2007, Facebook announced Beacon, a system that used Facebook data to deliver targeted advertising to its legions and legions of friends. But the friends weren't having it because this very same smart system made private data public. I mean, does Oreo really need to know that I ate an entire box of the double-stuffed product during a weak moment over the weekend? About two years later, after a class-action lawsuit and threat of an FTC probe, Facebook gave in to the pressure and Beacon was cooked.

Places, everyone

Last August, Facebook unleashed a function that allowed your friends to check you into a place. Think unflattering photo-tagging, only worse. Any unwitting friend who had not declined third-party check-ins was in for a world of awkward, such as being outed for hanging with you at a bar instead of studying for the bar. The only folks we think were celebrating this development were the business owners—receiving free pub—and the society of serious stalkers.

Invasion of the member-snatchers

'Membra when people had to ask if they could join your groups? Well, Facebook said to hell with that in October and started allowing your friends to toss you into any general or niche category without warning. Adding insult to injury, you would then receive group updates ... constantly, unless you went to settings to switch them off. Sure, you could leave the group and receive amnesty from a re-adding, but still. Seems like virtual kidnapping to us.

Prosecutor: Victim said he wasn't in gang

Brian DeLeon told the bat-wielding attacker bearing down on him near a Logan Square school last week that he wasn't in a gang, but the man ignored his pleas, prosecutors said Wednesday in court.

"I'm not about that. I'm not a Spanish Cobra," Brian, 14, allegedly told Esteban Miranda, the 19-year-old man now charged with attempted murder and armed robbery in the Sept. 13 attack that left Brian in a coma.

Miranda was arrested Sunday, and law enforcement sources say they built the case against the reputed Maniac Latin Disciple after fellow gang members said they tried unsuccessfully to stop the beating.

Judge Peggy Chiampas ordered Miranda, of the 1600 block of North Campbell Avenue, held without bail in Cook County Jail during a court hearing Wednesday morning.

Man hit, killed on Green Line

Service on the Green Line was interrupted for more than an hour Wednesday morning after a man was hit and killed by a train on the westbound tracks. The person was dead on the tracks just east of Cicero, said Fire Department spokesman Richard Rosado. The incident occurred about 8:45 a.m.

New Wal-Mart opens

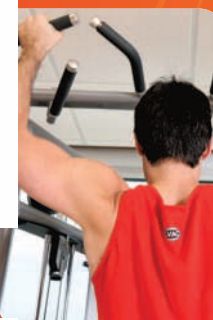

Wal-Mart opened its first neighborhood market store in Chicago on Wednesday morning at the Presidential Towers apartment complex in the West Loop. The 27,000-square-foot grocery store, first announced in February, marks the discount chain's renewed push to expand into Chicago after years of battling a union-led effort to keep the world's largest retailer outside the city limits.

Homicides from Sept. 14 to 4 p.m. Wednesday.

HOMICIDE TRACKER

By Tracy Swartz TSWARTZ@TRIBUNE.COM | @TRACYSWARTZ

South Lawndale saw two homicides in one day last week, a RedEye analysis of preliminary police data found.

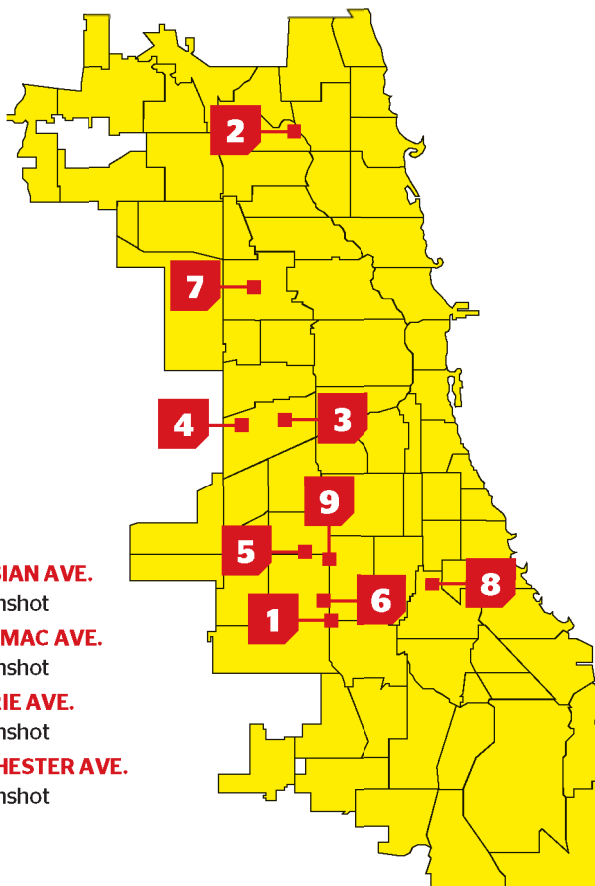

On Saturday, a 23-year-old man was shot to death in the 2500 block of South Spaulding Avenue and a 28-year-old man was stabbed to death in the 2600 block of South Kedvale Avenue, officials said.

South Lawndale has recorded 14 homicides so far this year, RedEye data shows. The community area logged 16 homicides last year.

Citywide, gunshot homicides were recorded in the last week in Albany Park, Auburn Gresham, Chicago Lawn, Gage Park, Humboldt Park, Washington Park and West Englewood, RedEye determined.

Thirty-one homicides have been recorded so far this month—the same number of homicides police recorded in September 2010, RedEye found.

Sex assault near DePaul

A woman was robbed and sexually assaulted at gunpoint Wednesday afternoon in Lincoln Park, police said. An unidentified man attacked the woman in the 2600 block of North Wilton Avenue, a few blocks from the DePaul University campus, at 2:30 p.m., police said. No other information on the incident was available.

Officer accused of lying

A former Chicago police officer has been accused of getting into an argument with a motorist in a funeral procession, then lying during a trial and to her superiors that the motorist had hit her with a bottle. She joined the department in 2002 and resigned earlier this year as the 2010 incident was being investigated.

Teen charged in death

A 14-year-old boy has been charged with fatally shooting a 15-year-old boy in what may have been an internal gang conflict in Washington Park, police said. The teen was cited in a delinquency petition in connection with the Monday afternoon shooting death of Steven McGee, 15, police said.

Davis executed despite appeal to Supreme Court

1 Georgia inmate Troy Davis was put to death by lethal injection late Wednesday for the 1989 murder of an off-duty police officer, MSNBC reported.

Davis' death came after a three-hour hold while the Supreme Court considered a late request for a stay, but in the end the court refused to stop the execution, despite calls for clemency from former President Jimmy Carter, Pope Benedict XVI and others.

Also executed Wednesday night was Lawrence Russell Brewer, 44, who was convicted of capital murder in Texas for helping kill a black man by dragging him behind a truck.

The Cubs played for the final time at Wrigley Field this season Wednesday, and at least they went out on a high note with a 7-1 win over Milwaukee.

There will be no playoffs on the North Side, of course, though next year is only six short—or extremely long, depending on how much you like snow—months away. Here's what we think will be new about the Cubs and Wrigley when the 2012 home opener rolls around April 5. REDEYE ILLUSTRATION

A new third baseman

Aramis Ramirez said Wednesday that "the chances to come back here don't look pretty good right now." It'll be tough replacing the .306 average and 92 RBIs he's put up in 2011. Yet ditching his salary (he made $14.6 million this year) may be a good way to upgrade other positions.

A new manager

With due respect to Mike Quade, who's still under contract, his fate probably will be in the hands of the yet-to-be-hired general manager. That combined with a yawn-inspiring performance this season means there's a decent chance someone else will fill out the lineup card in 2012.

A new head-scratching advertisement

It's been a year since the Toyota sign in left field and the Kraft noodle were unveiled, so Wrigley's due for another attention-grabbing advertisement. A giant hot dog would be appropriate—especially if Sammy Sosa still were around. Just hold the ketchup.

A new statue

Years from now, Starlin Castro might deserve a bronze statue outside Wrigley. Until that happens, we think Ferguson Jenkins is due for the honor. The Hall of Famer dominated on the North Side in the '60s and would be a worthy addition alongside the sculptures of Ron Santo, Billy Williams and Ernie Banks.

UFC champ learning fast

At age 24, Jon "Bones" Jones continues to shock the world.

It takes years to develop the skills needed to compete in the octagon. You can say Jones is a bit of an exception to that rule, however. Since he started fighting in 2008, Jones is 13-1. On Saturday at UFC 135 (8 p.m., pay-per-view), Jones takes on one of the most well-known fighters in mixed martial arts in Quinton "Rampage" Jackson.

Jones' light heavyweight championship will be on the line in Denver, and it's just one of many eye-opening achievements he's collected in his short career.

A junior college wrestling champion, Jones originally wanted to be a police officer but took the path of an MMA fighter instead. The rest of the story is remarkable, with all this happening in three years' time.

Making his debut at UFC 87 in August 2008 as a replacement fighter for Tomasz Drwal, Jones took the fight with two weeks' notice and won via unanimous decision. During his debut there were flashes of his impressive capabilities, and it all seemed to come together March 19, 2011.

In that fight, many put their money on Jones' opponent, Shogun Rua, the light heavyweight champion at the time. Rua certainly had an edge in that Jones had never been in a championship bout. Yet Jones emerged with a dominant TKO victory, becoming the youngest person to win a UFC title.

The common theme for the so-called "experts" in the past has been to turn the other way when Jones is fighting. But when he continues to show he is the real deal in the cage at such a young age, it's frightening.

Saturday's bout will be Jones' first title defense, though with the talent he has shown there is no reason why he shouldn't walk out of the Pepsi Center still the champion.

TED GRUBER BLOGS ABOUT MIXED MARTIAL ARTS AT CHICAGONOW.COM/MMADISPUTED.

“YOU HAVE SUCCESS, YOU CAN TALK ALL THE [BLEEP] YOU WANT.”

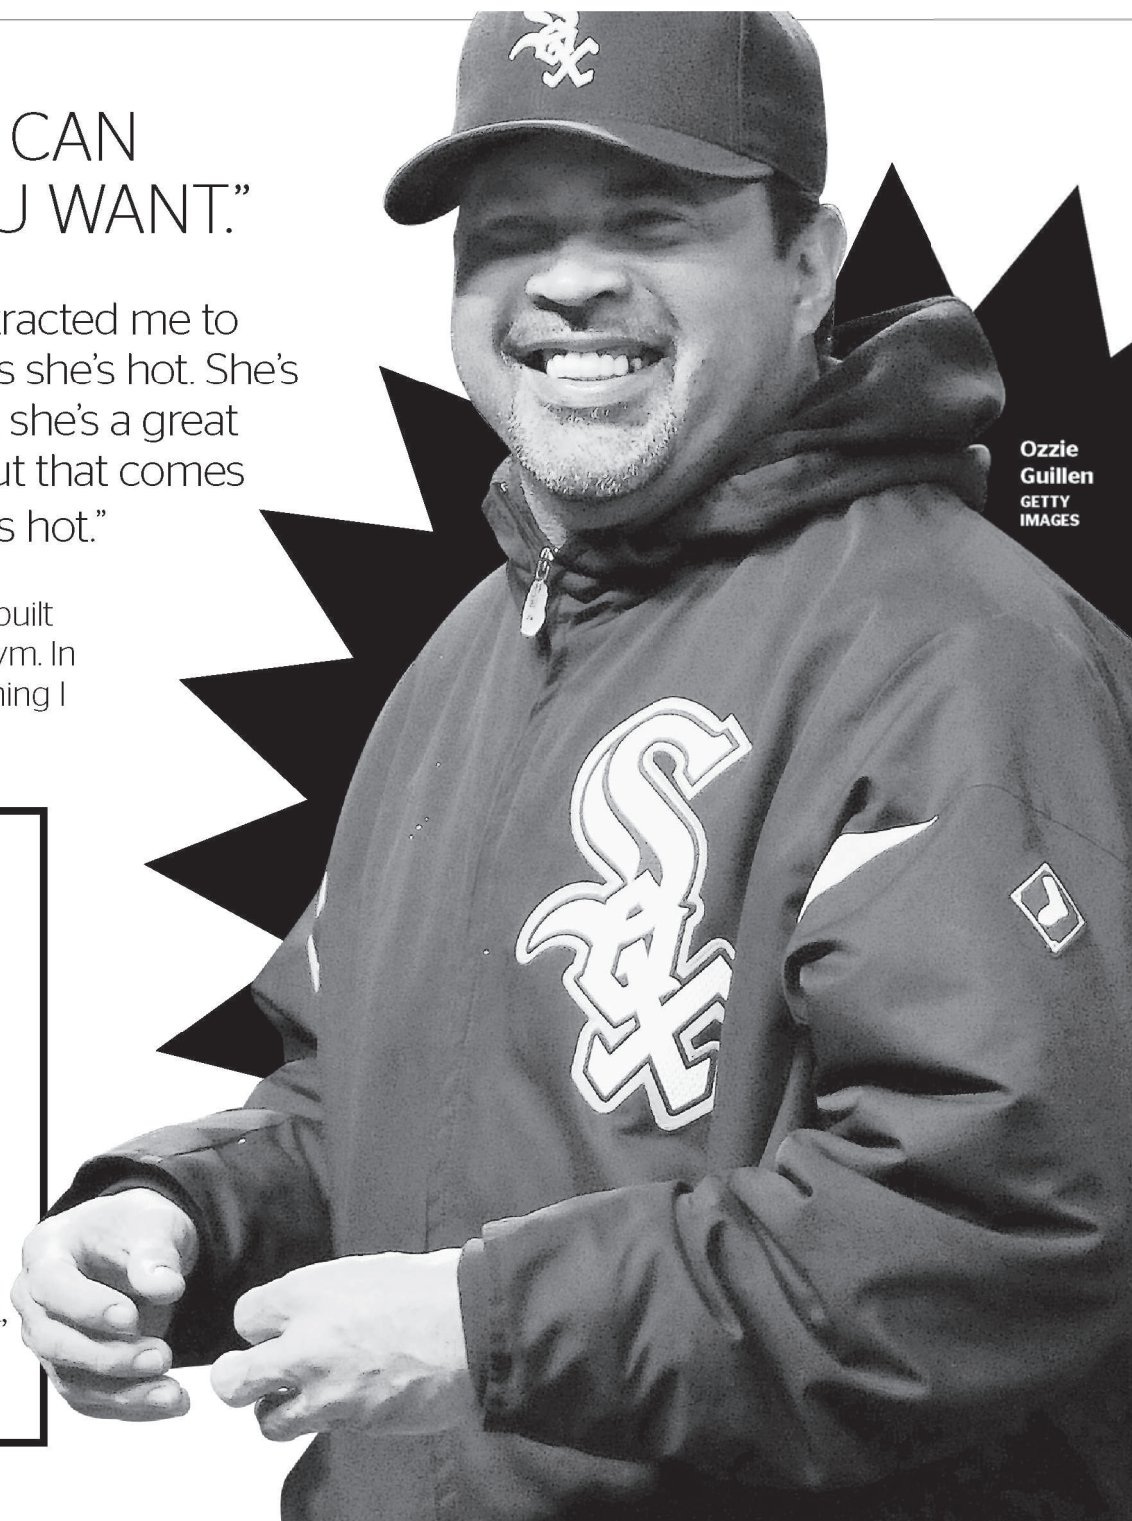

“I tell my kids to be careful who they have sex with. Pick the right woman, because that kid is going to be a Guillen for the rest of his life.”

“What attracted me to my wife is she’s hot. She’s also nice, she’s a great mom—but that comes after she’s hot.”

“In the ’80s and ’90s, people made a lot of money and built houses. The first thing they put in their houses was a gym. In my house, the first thing I built was a bar. The second thing I built was another bar.”

ASK OZZIE

The laws of attraction and relationships, according to Ozzie Guillen, are pretty simple. The White Sox manager did an interview posted on esquire.com on Wednesday. Check out his pearls of wisdom.

COPS AND JOCKS Vikings safety arrested

Minnesota Vikings safety Tyrell Johnson (left) apologized Wednesday, one day after he was arrested on suspicion of driving while impaired on a Minneapolis-area interstate. Johnson was arrested early Tuesday and authorities said his blood-alcohol level was 0.12 percent, above the state’s legal limit of 0.08 percent.

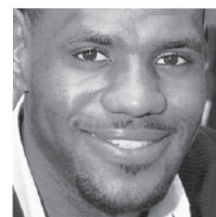

“Just for advice to everybody else, whoever gets in that situation, it’s not worth it,” he said. “You’ve got to make that call if you can’t drive home. Even if you think you’re good, you’re not good.”

That’s just beach-y

If nothing else, the caretakers of Soldier Field’s turf are trying new things.

“With this new field, we’ve gone with one that has more of a sand-based content to it,” Luca Serra, director of sponsorship and media at Soldier Field, told the Tribune on Wednesday. “The expectation obviously is that it’s going to play well for the team, provide them with great footing and be able to be played with for a number of games.”

And if THIS doesn’t work, THEN will they switch to the artificial stuff?

How does humble pie taste, LeBron?

It’s not a total 180-degree turn-around, but LeBron James (left) shows he can be self-deprecating in a new commercial for McDonald’s. In the ad, James, who last off-season infamously predicted his Miami Heat would win more than seven NBA championships, takes a more humble approach. When the narrator asks what the odds are of the forward winning seven titles, James simply smiles and answers with a sincere-looking, “Come on, man.” So he didn’t leave his sense of humor in Cleveland after all.

1 How can you tell Blackhawks preseason games have started?	I've worn a jacket to work a few times. Not happy about it.	The games are available to watch only on the Web.	I'm so excited, I'm going to answer the rest of these questions with hockey references!	The dramatic decline in NFL ratings. Americans love hockey, especially hockey that doesn't count.	People have been asking me when I start shooting fireworks from my paws.
2 Why did Jay Cutler wish Kristin Cavallari luck on "Dancing with the Stars"?	Because he's really sincere and thoughtful. That's why he used Twitter.	He didn't want to see her get slammed like he did Sunday.	He wants to score through her five-hole again.	In hopes she'll play O-line for the Bears when she's done. He'll take any help he can get.	Jay has her on his reality TV fantasy league.
3 What should the Big Ten's next move be amid all the conference realignment?	Rather than expand, shrink to the Big Two. So begins the heated annual competition for first or last.	Why not send out an invite to the University of Hawaii? Give 'em all home games.	Big Ten? Psh. The only "Big" thing I'm worried about is John Scott.	Lose to an SEC team. Seems to be their answer to everything else.	Recruit universities to beef up the Big Ten Hockey Conference that begins play in 2013-14.
4 Why is Ozzie Guillen so anxious about having his contract extended?	He just wants to know people appreciate the totally average job he's doing.	He wants his health insurance to be secured before heading to Spain to bullfight.	He wants more free tickets to Blackhawks games.	Where else is he going to get all those free sunflower seeds?	So he can spend his signing bonus on Wolves season tickets before the team's home opener Oct. 15.
5 At this point, what would get you to attend a Cubs or Sox game?	A time machine. Future preferred, past acceptable.	For reasons other than work?	Put a rink inside the field and give the players sticks and roller skates.	If it were an NBA game. Oh this lockout sucks.	All the Vienna Beef hot dogs I can eat during the game. Kobayashi's got nothing on me!

5 fresh bars to check out this weekend

Whether you're looking to stay out until 5 a.m. in Logan Square, sip a new beer in Lakeview, down an order of fish and chips in the Loop or sip a spiked shake in River North, there's a new nightlife spot to satisfy nearly every craving this month.

The Owl

773-235-5300

Looking for another 5 a.m. spot in the Logan Square area? The Owl is your spot. Opened by David Halpern, the man behind Estelle's and Easy Bar, the bar keeps it simple—beer, liquor and a jukebox. If you're hungry, ask for a recommendation for a nearby spot that delivers. Follow them @theowlchicago on Twitter to keep up with nightly specials ($2-$3 pints recently were featured—not bad).

Paddy O'Fegans

The latest Irish bar in the West Loop mixes bar food such as burgers and chicken sandwiches with traditional favorites such as fish and chips, bangers and mash and corned beef. Drinkers can choose from more than 10 beers on tap, including Guinness; there's also a small wine and martini list. A handful of house cocktails includes the "Jeremiah (was a bullfrog) Festive Cider" made with sweet tea vodka, apple schnapps, apple cider and cinnamon syrup.

The Green Lady

3328 N. Lincoln Ave. 773-525-5571

We were glad to hear that something had opened up in the old Shire space. That the new bar has 30 beers on tap? Even better. The Lakeview spot is hoping to create a following among neighborhood beer lovers for its cozy atmosphere and knowledgeable staff. There's no food now, but a kitchen is in the works for February. This River North tavern opened in early September with a Midwestern flair. Expect many of the 24 beers on tap to hail from Illinois, Indiana, Michigan and Wisconsin (anything outside of the region is labeled an "import"). The rotating menu takes a similar local approach, with a list of comfort food bar snacks such as beer nuts, mac and cheese fritters, burgers and more. We're dying to try their spiked float, made with oatmeal stout, ice cream and a shot of bourbon.

Patron's Hacienda

316 W. Erie St. 312-642-2400

With the owners aiming to open the doors Friday, this new River North cantina should look something like a sports bar hybrid with casual Mexican eats. There will be plenty of salsa and queso dip on the menu, alongside nachos, seafood specials and more. A full bar featuring wine, Mexican beer and cocktails also is available. And although the bar doesn't have any ties to the popular brand, expect plenty of tequila.

PEOPLE YOU SHOULD KNOW

MEET THE OWNER OF LAKEVIEW'S NEWEST BEER BAR: MELANI DOMINGUES

By Emily Van Zandt

After taking over the former Shire space on Lincoln Avenue, Melani Domingues worked to transform the intimate bar into a space of her own, with 30 craft beers on draft. The spot opened in early September, but the work is never done—Domingues hopes to add a food menu in early 2012.

How long have you been working in the nightlife industry?

20 years. The people and ever-changing trends [are what keep me there].

What's your favorite local beer?

Goose Island Bourbon County Stout, because it's a big beer, a world-class pioneer of the style, and like all good things, gets better with age.

Do you prefer a night in or night out?

I haven't had a day off since we opened and don't foresee one in the near future ... any free time is spent at The Green Lady or home ... but I am dying to make it down the street to Northdown (3244 N. Lincoln Ave.). I hear their pie is amazing!

What does it take to be a good beer bar?

A good beer bar must have: Variety in selection, a welcoming atmosphere and a knowledgeable staff to care for the beer.

Who's drinking the punch?

Emily
Van Zandt

» evanzandt@tribune.com

» @mmxbars

Fill me in—who is ordering punch in bars?

Not spiked lemonades, not pitchers of mimosas—bowls of punch. The retro cocktails for a crowd have had their time at Chicago bars over the years, seen on the menu at spots such as The Exchange in Wicker Park, Rebar in the Trump Tower and Gold Coast club Proof.

Much more than the jungle juice you remember from undergrad days, the ladled drinks are built with the same measured and complicated steps as many classic cocktails. The trend has gotten plenty of ink, with noted drinks guru (and frequent Esquire magazine contributor) David Wondrich heralding the method in his 2010 book Punch: The Delights (and Dangers) of the Flowing Bowl.

But in all my time in Chicago bars—and in the past year, I've clocked in a solid showing—I have never seen a group order (or even discuss ordering) a bowl of punch.

Clearly though, it's being done. Why would bars continue to offer it if patrons weren't taking the bait? Stephen Cole, former Violet Hour mixologist and the man behind upcoming Lincoln Park cocktail spot The Barrelhouse Flat, chatted with me a few days ago about his plan to have several punch options on the bar's extensive drinks menu. Cole is a smart guy—if he didn't think customers were going to buy into the trend, the punches wouldn't have made the cut.

But how long will they last on the menu? And who will be ordering them?

Certainly, in order to afford a bowl (they aren't cheap—the “Flor Blanco” sangria that Rebar offered by the bowl over the summer was $255) you need a group. A group whose members are all interested in a complicated drink—the same complicated drink—and are willing to compromise.

Seems simple enough. After all, if we put up with sloshing purple liquid out of a Rubbermaid tub into plastic cups in the front lawn of a frat house, we can probably get behind splitting a bowl that involves bitters instead of Kool-Aid mix.

At least, Stephen Cole is hoping we can. What do you think? Are punches worth it?

EMILY VAN ZANDT IS A REDEYE REPORTER. SHE ONCE SPIKED A BOWL OF PUNCH WITH A HANDLE OF CHERRY WHISKEY. SEVERAL PARTY ATTENDEES HAVE STOPPED SPEAKING TO HER. EVANZANDT@TRIBUNE.COM | @MMXBARS

Connect with Canines at Bill Jacobs Subaru Joliet

JOLIET—Canine companionship can make life much easier for people with disabilities. That is the lesson the Ray Graham Association will teach Sat., Sept. 24, starting at 9 a.m. at Bill Jacobs Subaru, when service dogs and their trainers gather to demonstrate how they can help the intellectually and developmentally disabled live a more independent life by assisting with daily functions and activities.

Bill Jacobs dealerships enjoy a long history of contributing to charitable organizations in Illinois, expending and donating countless hours of time, energy, manpower and money to worthwhile causes. The Ray Graham Association is just one of many.

Ray Graham's Thomas F. Morris Service Dog Program is the only one of its kind in Illinois, focusing specifically on assessing the specific service needs of the disabled, and providing targeted training for these dogs and their owners. Each dog in the program must undergo at least 500 hours of extensive training over a 12-month period before becoming a certified service dog.

"We know how beneficial these services are to people in need of assistance," Cynthia Thrall, Bill Jacobs Auto Group President, says. "We're thrilled to be associated with such a worthwhile organization such as Ray Graham, to participate in this educational event, and host such a talented group of people at our store. We hope they receive a well-deserved, enthusiastic welcome and a terrific turnout!"

Bill Jacobs Subaru is located at 2525 W. Jefferson St. For more information about the event or Bill Jacobs dealerships, people can contact them at (800) 679-2077, or visit them online at billjacobssubaru.com.

- Serving as a brace for an owner exiting a wheelchair, bed or bathtub
- Carrying items at home, school or work
- Helping the owner travel independently within the community

Chicago's big in Texas

Since they like things big in Texas, a whopping 29 chefs were named as "hopefuls" for this season, with six being from Chicago. Only 16 of those 29 will snag a spot to compete as a cheftestant on the show. Here's a look at our six. LISA ARNETT, REDEYE

The eyes have it, girl

Los Angeles Times

Women who wear eyeliner and mascara know how difficult it is to find an efficient, effective way to get it all off at the end of the day, especially because it's such a pain taking that extra step of using a separate eye makeup remover in addition to a facial cleanser.

With the big trend in striking eye makeup and dramatic lashes coming for fall, taking an extra moment to swipe some makeup remover across the eye might be more important than ever. MAC Cosmetics senior makeup artist John Stapleton offers some expert advice on how to leave raccoon eyes behind.

"If we're talking about eye makeup that's waterproof, multi-layered, cry-proof ... then something emollient is your best bet," he says. He recommends MAC Cleanse Off Oil ($24), which softens and cushions the delicate eye area while removing makeup.

Stapleton says you don't necessarily have to bring in the big guns to remove heavy eye makeup. "Most watery cleansers are strong enough to do the job," he says. For instance, he recommends MAC Pro Eye Makeup Remover ($10) applied with a cotton round for a softer removal.

He adds not to turn your nose up at good old-fashioned baby oil ($5.89) on a cotton ball or pad. "Just make sure to use your favorite cleanser after" to remove oily residue, he says.

There doesn't seem to be any avoiding the two-step process.

PRODUCTS TO TRY

Here are other eye-makeup removers with different levels of strength and various skin-soothing ingredients.

» A couple of pumps of pumps of Shiseido Cleansing Oil ($23) into the hand and about 30 seconds spent smearing over eye makeup tends to get nearly all of it off. But it is oil, and those with an already oily complexion may not want to add more.

» Lancôme Bi-Facil Double Action eye makeup remover ($26) takes off even the most shellacked-on waterproof makeup. It's not oily at all.

» Apply a little Balms Away Eye Makeup Breakup ($20) directly on the eye area and it breaks down eyeliner and mascara, which is then easy enough to wipe away.

All about the ladies

Two new series premiering Thursday try to reinterpret iconic detective shows — with completely different results.

Maria Bello

NBC's "Prime Suspect," an adaptation of the British series that made Helen Mirren an international star, will hit its stride as soon as it forgets its ancestor. ABC's "Charlie's Angels" is as absurd as the original 1976-81 series that launched the careers of Farrah Fawcett, Jaclyn Smith and Kate Jackson.

Stepping in for Mirren, Maria Bello goes deep to create a completely different but equally weary homicide detective, this time named Jane Timoney. Bello's impatient, outspoken and intense Jane would be an asset to any squad, but she's spent years on the sideline thanks to police department sexism — and her own prickly personality.

Bello's new show will never fill the gumshoes of the original, partly because network TV audiences demand their cops solve crimes in one episodes. But thanks to the rock solid performances of Bello and her male co-stars, that doesn't matter. The new "Suspect" reminds me more of 1970s cop dramas such as "Kojak" and "Baretta" than the show that inspired it.

"Charlie's Angels," on the other hand, feels exactly like the original, which makes it more dated than having a "modern twist," as the network insists. Three young women

'Charlie's Angels'

Charlie's Angels
7 p.m. ABC

Prime Suspect
9 p.m. NBC

(they were called "little girls" in the original, so there!) are brought together by a faceless voice named Charlie to work at his private detective agency. Abby (Rachael Taylor), Kate (Annie Ilonze) and Eve (Minka Kelly), this time with a hunky Bosley (Ramon Rodriguez), break rules and blow stuff up to make Miami a safer place.

"Angels" was a hit 35 years ago because viewers obviously didn't mind idiotic dialogue and illogical plots. Oh, and it also worked because so few action shows had women as the leads. From "Alias" on TV to most of Angelina Jolie's films, women kick butt on a regular basis these days.

So why a new "Charlie's Angels"? Three ... hot ... women. MORE AT SHOWPATROLTVM.COM

RECORD BREAKERS

SOMETIMES, BEING A HUGE INTERNATIONAL CELEBRITY JUST ISN'T ENOUGH

By Dana Moran
REDEYE

The smallest living dog is 4 inches tall. A Wisconsin man had eaten 23,000 Big Macs as of October 2008. And the longest cucumber is 47 inches. Celebrities might not hold records as kooky as these, but some of them still have found their way into the Guinness World Records. We checked out records from the 2012 book, released last week, to see which celebs made the cut. DAMORAN@TRIBUNE.COM

Adele

The British megastar already is having the best year ever, so why not top it off with three brand-new Guinness records to her name? The singer belted it out for First female to have two singles and two albums in U.K. Top 5 simultaneously, Most consecutive weeks with U.K. No. 1 album (solo female) and the Most cumulative weeks with U.K. No. 1 album. Think she needs a break yet?

Lil Wayne

Weezy's "Tha Carter IV" had a huge debut this year, but does that compare to a Guinness record? He earned the prize for Rapper with the most U.S. Hot 100 hits, racking up a massive 64 between December 1999 and October 2010.

Prince William and Kate Middleton

Snootiest butlers? Most pairs of shoes? Hardly. Kate and Wills took home the crown (har!) for Most live streams for a single event when 72 million people tuned in for their April 29 nuptials. 30 million of those were specifically for her sister Pippa's bum.

Justin Bieber

The 17-year-old proves age ain't nothin' but a number when it comes to popularity. His "Baby" holds Guinness' title for both the Top music video on YouTube AND the Most-viewed video online of any kind. It currently has 625,704,327 views—does he get a party when it hits 1 billion?

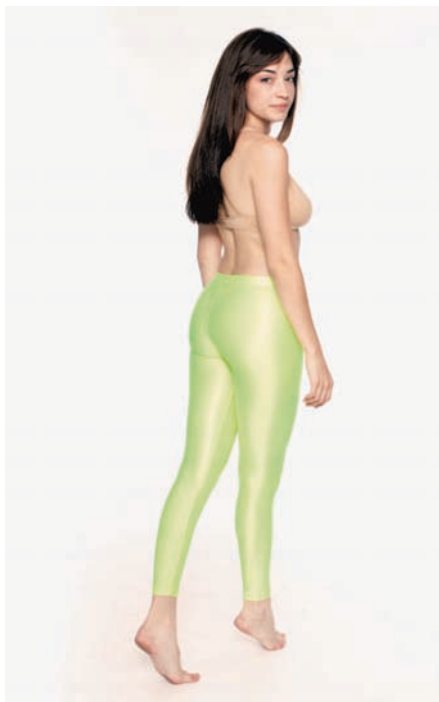

Lady Gaga

While we're sure Gaga was gunning for some of the book's odder honors, she currently holds the records for Most followers on Twitter with more than 11 million, and Track with most weeks on the U.S. hot digital songs chart for "Poker Face." She probably has the phone number for the lady with the longest fingernails though.

Mommy dearest

Her "Mad Men" character, Betty Draper, is one scary mother, but new mom January Jones is going to make it work. The Los Angeles Times reports the show is ready to make the set baby-friendly when Jones returns. "We'll find a way for her to be the most modern mommy in the world while playing one of the most primitive on TV," creator Matthew Weiner said.

Toy story

Now this is getting into character. Maggie Gyllenhaal, who stars in "Hysteria," an upcoming movie about the invention of the vibrator, gave a sex toy to everyone working on the film, usmagazine.com reports. "It was expensive!" she told Reuters. Sure, but it had utility!

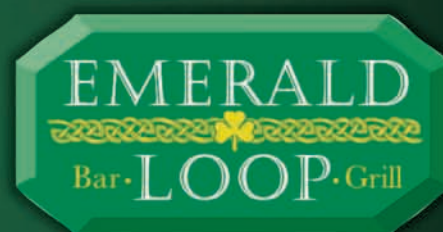

Let him clarify ...

Brad Pitt is once again defending comments he made about Angelina Jolie and Jennifer Aniston in Parade magazine, this time on the "Today" show. "My point was, the best thing I'd done as a father is be sure that my kids have a good mother," he said, according to eonline.com. "And I think it's a shame that I can't say something nice about Angie without Jen being [dragged] in."
